#AIHS2023
AfricaInt'lhousingshow

DEAR PARTICIPANTS

We are thrilled to welcome you to Abuja for the 17th edition of the Africa's largest housing and construction expo, AFRICA INTERNATIONAL HOUSING SHOW 2023.

This event is the culmination of an annual enormous collective effort which began over a decade ago. Following the spectacular success of previous editions, the nation's housing sector has experienced a paradigm shift while many institutions and individuals have benefited massively through its development communication approaches.

Ladies and Gentlemen, Africa faces various hurdles in its pursuit of a sustainable housing strategy and agenda. Working together is the only way to attain this sustainability. Working with a renewed vision for a practical and productive housing strategy that will not only make dwellings available to citizens but will also constitute a strong economic strength; working toward a governmental sector that is devoted to collaborating closely with the private sector, selecting key industries, and developing massive economic strategies to exploit the housing sector. →

Distinguished participants, let me express, on behalf of the AIHS Board, our most sincere wish that the discussions and resolutions resulting from this 4-day event will positively contribute to the consolidation of the aims of AIHS and thereby to the philosophy underlying it.

For us, AIHS is not just a housing advocacy platform but also a leading fora for those running major African companies, to contribute to Africa's economic transformation by promoting the housing sector through public-private partnership, and to help the continent's housing and construction activities become pan-African, and even global champions.

Since 2020, the world has changed tremendously, and we are still moving from crisis to crisis. These crises are speeding trends, whether they are in the shape of climate change, national retrenchment, global value chain disruption, economic decarbonization, or inflationary pressure, which are influencing the housing industry negatively. →

DEAR PARTICIPANTS

We are convening in Abuja to focus on the theme “BEYOND RHETORIC TO HOMES: Making Housing Happen” in order to better comprehend and analyze these developments, as well as gain insight into their sustainability. The current societal discourse emphasizes housing multiplier effects and the critical role it plays in the continent’s economic change.

Over 70 percent of the 16th AIHS’ sessions will be directly related to this theme, including the political leaders’ discussion, a climate change session with a special emphasis on green housing, and exhibitions. Also at the heart of our discussions will be proptech and finance talks. In parallel, and in keeping with its purpose of identifying business world trends, the AIHS will hold exhibitor sessions and deal-room meetings to chart business paths and collaborations.

The AIHS 2023 conference promises to be a truly remarkable event, one that we hope you will find valuable and fulfilling.

I encourage you to download the AIHS app “AIHS CONNECT” on Apple or Google store to enable us to interact smoothly with you and to give you access to some of the opportunities we have created for this special event.

Thank You and Cheers!

Festus Adebayo
Coordinator, Africa Int’l Housing Show

WELCOME TO ABUJA

Since the dawn of civilization, human beings have always needed shelter to survive. The struggle of man has been centered on acquisition of shelter after food security.

Many African governments successfully met the challenge posed by the corona virus pandemic by taking prompt and calculated actions to mitigate its effects. Nevertheless, the pandemic made millions of people miserable and reduced global rate of housing provision, thus plunging many into fear of uncertainty.

Due to its sizable population and rapid urbanization, Nigeria will continue to account for the largest share of new housing units in the African and Middle East regions.

According to the Africa Business Community report, Nigeria, South Africa and Iraq are expected to see the fastest growth as they recover from their disappointing 2014–2019 performance periods.

It also showed that, aside from 2020, when the region experienced recession brought → about by COVID-19, healthy economic expansion would continue to be the main drivers of homebuilding activities in the Africa/Middle East region. In 2019, there were 398 million existing housing units in the Africa/Middle East region, making up 18% of the world's housing stock.

Due to low average incomes in many of the populous countries in the region, the average unit size was only 69 square meters in 2019 despite the high percentage of single-family homes, ranking among the lowest in the world.

The region's ongoing rural-to-urban migration has led to an increase in the share of multi-family housing. There is a serious housing shortage in the area, and a large portion of the population lives in terrible, informal housing without even the most basic amenities.

What does this imply to us as a nation/continent?

With the current realities shrouding the housing deficit in Nigeria and the African continent, it's important that African leaders embrace a new trend of housing delivery and then unlock the potential of Public Private Partnership (PPP) →

WELCOME TO ABUJA

Investments that lay the groundwork for the future development of the region are necessary for Africa's housing recovery. Making housing a top priority, bolstering the continent's environmental/green sectors, and ensuring that investors operate in an environment that promotes business growth and returns are all necessary to achieve this.

Since over 48% of Nigeria's construction materials are still imported, more locally produced materials and alternatives need to be deployed. Infrastructural development also continues to be a problem, hence the need for investments to support the value chain of construction materials and address the urgent need for affordable housing.

With its 16th edition, the Africa International Housing Show (AIHS) offers a singular forum for discussing, debating, and formulating solutions to these and other housing development opportunities and challenges that the African continent faces. I'm more impressed by the talent, spirited leaders, movers and shakers we have here in Abuja for this show.

Why Abuja?

Abuja is the capital city of Nigeria, in the middle of the country. The skyline of the city, which was built largely in the 1980s, is dominated by Aso Rock, an enormous monolith. It rises up behind the Presidential Complex, which houses the residence and offices of the Nigerian president in the Three Arms Zone on the eastern edge of the city. Nearby are the National Assembly and the Supreme Court of Nigeria.

We have a great deal to talk about and do in this beautiful city.

Let's get the ball rolling.

Once again, welcome to the Center of Unity.

EDGE AND THE GREEN BUILDING BUSINESS CASE

Green buildings offer a large and commercially viable decarbonization opportunity for building owners and financial institutions. Today's buildings generate 39 percent of GHG emissions from energy use. By 2060, the built environment is expected to double, mainly driven by construction in emerging markets. However, uptake of green options lags due to lack of awareness of the business case, misperceptions of high costs, lack of experience across the supply chain, and asymmetry of information between sellers who build for efficiency and buyers who do not have the expertise to appraise sellers' claims. The EDGE program addresses these barriers by building capacity with designers, developers, banks, policymakers, and academia, creating a demonstration portfolio, and offering a straightforward, affordable green certification tailored to client needs in each country and climate.

The Business Case for Green Building

In IFC's experience, the incremental construction cost of green buildings is less than 3% and is generally paid back within two to three years.

Green measures also futureproof buildings against transition risks from potentially stricter environmental regulations and changing owner/occupant preferences. Lower operating costs and lower investment risk from greening buildings translate to a variety of benefits for different stakeholders.

- ▶ Developers benefit from faster sales/leasing and greater market share.
- ▶ Owners enjoy higher value appreciation and rental yields, faster leasing, lower market and regulatory risks.
- ▶ Occupiers save on energy and water bills and are less exposed to energy price volatility.
- ▶ Financial intermediaries can diversify their investor base when they issue green building construction loans or mortgages and finance these through green finance. Demand for green bonds continues to grow, although studies have yet to confirm that this translates into lower funding costs.
- ▶ Governments also benefit from certified green buildings due to: reduced pressure to expand energy and water grids; reduced cost of energy subsidies to low-income households; and validated climate leadership through quantified GHG savings.

ABOUT EDGE

An innovation of IFC, a member of the World Bank Group, EDGE is a free design software and an affordable certification system that empowers clients to easily determine the most cost-effective ways to build green. EDGE catalyzes green investment pipeline by simplifying design decision-making and streamlines the impact reporting required for green finance. IFC has invested $7.5 billion in green buildings including mobilization. Since 2015 EDGE has certified about $35 billion of floorspace in 69 countries and it is growing exponentially. GHG reduction from EDGE buildings is estimated to be 645 thousand tCO₂e a year.

EDGE is now available worldwide to certify new and existing buildings of all types. It is growing exponentially because it is easy to use and costs a fraction of traditional certifications. It is also an affordable option for investors who want to map and track a path for zero carbon at portfolio level. EDGE serves all market segments, from social housing to grade A offices, hotels, datacenters, warehouses, light industry, retail and transport terminals. During the pandemic EDGE was used to certify rapidly built COVID hospitals.

The EDGE Standards and Global Certification System

EDGE certification is available worldwide for new and existing buildings of almost every typology, including: social housing to high income residential, multifamily buildings and landed homes; hotels; offices; shops; warehouses; light industry; datacenters; airports and other transport terminals; schools; hospitals; and places of worship. The EDGE system has three performance levels:

EDGE Standard

- ▶ The EDGE standard which requires 20% energy, 20% water, and 20% embodied energy in materials savings relative to new business as usual construction;

EDGE Advanced

- ▶ EDGE Advanced which requires an EDGE building to achieve 40% energy savings;

EDGE Zero Carbon

- ▶ EDGE Zero Carbon which requires an EDGE Advanced building to offset any GHG emissions with carbon credits.

The free EDGE design software helps clients decarbonize by instantaneous energy and cost modelling which minimizes incremental capital costs and accelerates investment decision-making. An EDGE client submits a design in the free EDGE software which is then evaluated by an independent certification provider. EDGE currently has the largest network of certification providers in the world, including the US Green Building Council's GBCI, the SGS-Sintali Consortium and six others. Once a project is certified, IFC helps clients communicate their successes to encourage others in the market. This support includes social media exposure, marketing advice, disseminating press releases, articles, and more.

EDGE is an Internationally accepted Standard for Green Finance

EDGE provides an affordable route to tap growing demand for green asset finance. For banks and corporates, green finance diversifies sources of funding and green bonds are in ever greater demand from investors. The free EDGE software provides estimated GHG, energy and water savings automatically, reducing the cost of generating quantified GHG impact reports. EDGE is now used by dozen of financial intermediaries and most development banks. It is recognized by the major green finance standard setters (ICMA, GRESB, and the Climate Bonds Initiative) and is aligned with the EU Taxonomy. The EU Taxonomy benchmarks buildings on the basis of kWh/m²/year which is also how EDGE works.

C-STEMP Construction Skills Training & Empowerment Program, was Conceived by J.Hausen Limited based on its experience of the severe shortage of skilled manpower constraining its operations and that of other real estate developers and building contractors. Spurred by the Construction Ideas fund (CIF) initiated by GEMS 2 and supported by DFID, C-STEMP has a key object to break the paradox of high unemployment and poverty in the midst of severe shortage of skilled manpower in the Nigerian construction sector. Its medium term objective is to spawn a network of training providers that can complement it to build up a critical mass of up to one million trained, assessed and certified artisans.
